

D*istinctive* Homes*
OF WEST COAST LUMBER

DESIGNED FOR BETTER LIVING

✧ Planning a home of your own is a wonderful experience! It draws together all your dreams and ideas into one harmonious expression of your individual needs and desires.

The homes of West Coast lumber in this booklet were carefully planned by the owners to meet their tastes and requirements, yet each has an unlimited appeal. They are presented in the belief that no house planner is ever finished with ideas until the last nail is driven.

Here's a plan for rental income or growing family! It incorporates a separate apartment in which any lucky student could cram without feeling the least bit cramped.

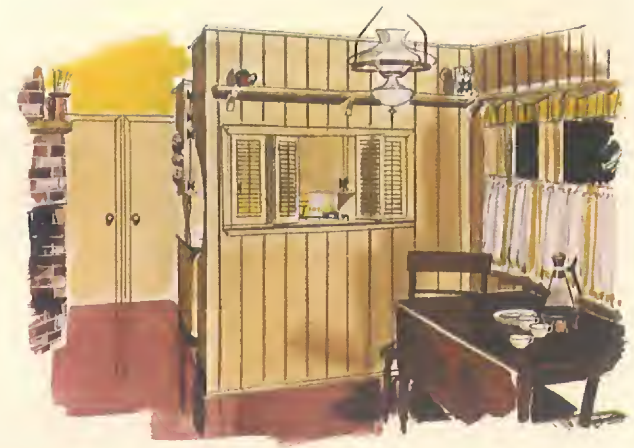

Basic floor plans as shown in this booklet were designed to meet the specific living requirements of the owners. To best answer YOUR individual needs in a home, see YOUR architect or builder.

✱ Natural West Coast hemlock fits naturally into kitchen planning. Cheerfully bright, it's easy to keep that way, too.

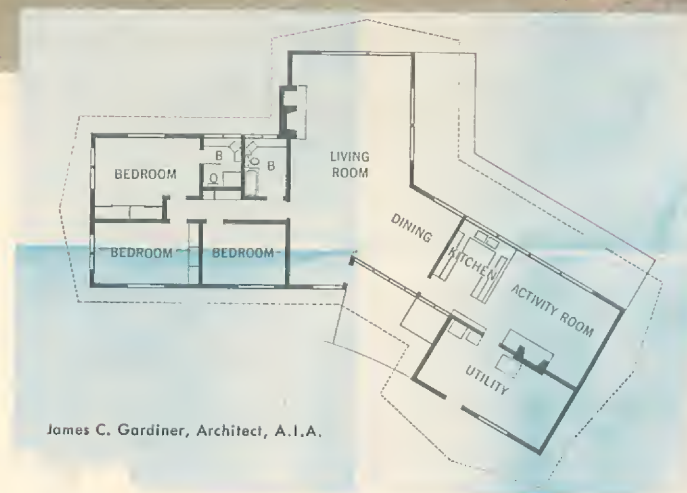

The strong diagonal of an outside stairway attractively accents this Western red cedar siding.

✱ You feel a sense of welcome as you step into this distinctive living room, a cordiality that is warmly expressed in the mellow tones of West Coast hemlock used in jalousies and lintel. Paneling above the fireplace provides a pleasant contrast to the ceiling tints and colorful furnishings.

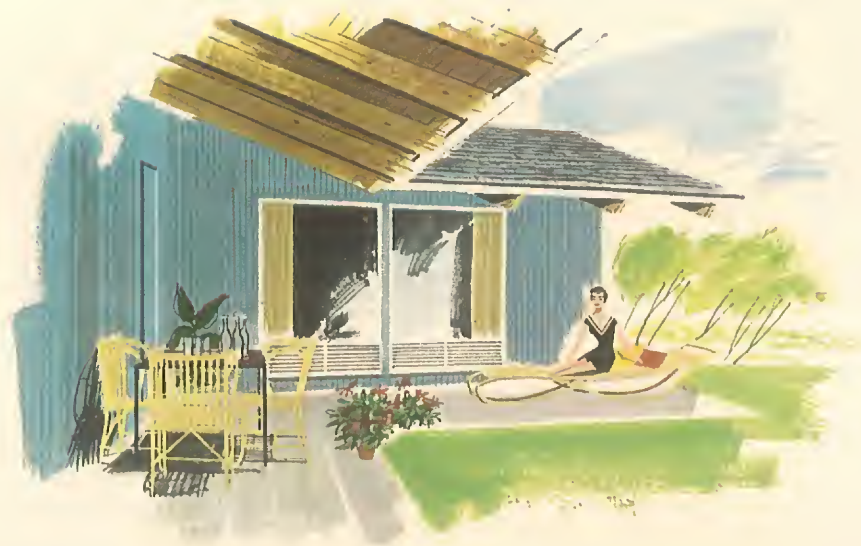

Combined carport-play areas are in high favor with more and more families. Providing open shade for a summer play spot, this carport in a natural finish merges smoothly with the low lines of the attractive ranch style home. The plan provides plenty of space for TV parties and group fun in a big family room close to the always-popular kitchen.

You'll find the patio of today's comfortable home an ideal place in which to relax in the sun or to informally entertain a few friends in the evening. It retains all the advantages of the front porch it replaces while adding one more: Privacy.

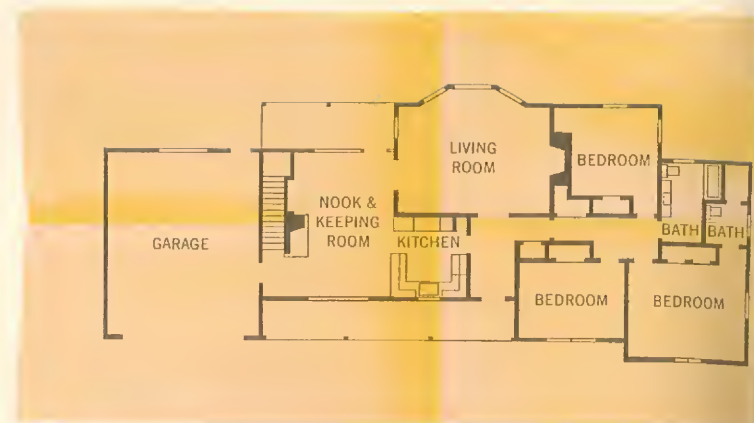

Party time! And the pleasant glow of wood adds its note to the festivity's color. Indoors or out, lumber is the smartly practical material.

The sturdy fir beams and an exposed ceiling impart restful comfort to this spacious living room, give it a homelike touch that is always in harmony with your mood or activities.

* Early American decor is easy with paneling and beams of Douglas fir. Warm to the touch, wood is equally warm to the eye and fits in beautifully with any decorative treatment.

* Pick any color or texture of furnishings you like, the mellowness of wood allows you to indulge your personal creativeness, secure in the knowledge that the final effect will be pleasing.

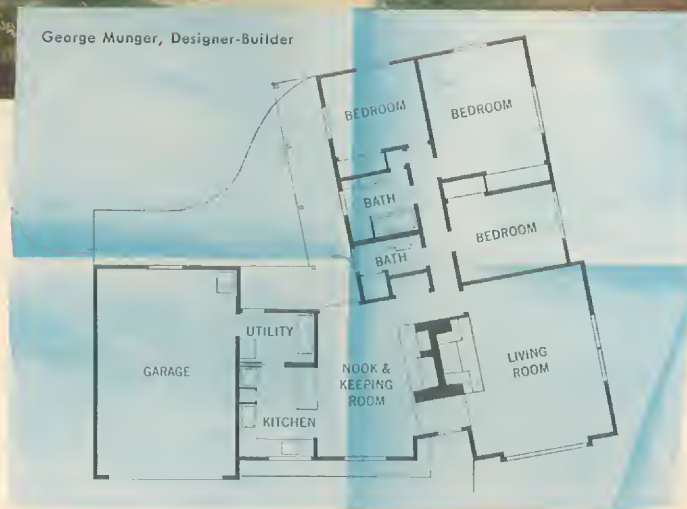

Soft hues furnish a fresh backdrop for beds of flowers, one complementing the other in a colorful arrangement of house and planting.

With a house of wood you're free to change its color at any time. Paint it bright, or neutral, or in combinations of colors and rely on West Coast lumber to make it last.

George Munger, Designer-Builder

✱ Have your friends over for an evening in the patio, complete with the sizzle of steaks, the savor of a charcoal fire and gay, friendly banter. Seclusion in a natural setting of wood is provided by the L-shaped floor plan.

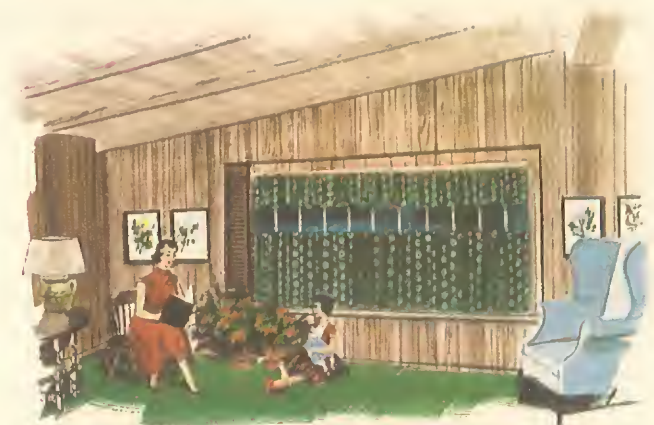

Guests often gravitate to the kitchen. And with one as distinctive as this, you'll have difficulty shoohing the galley gallery back to the living room.

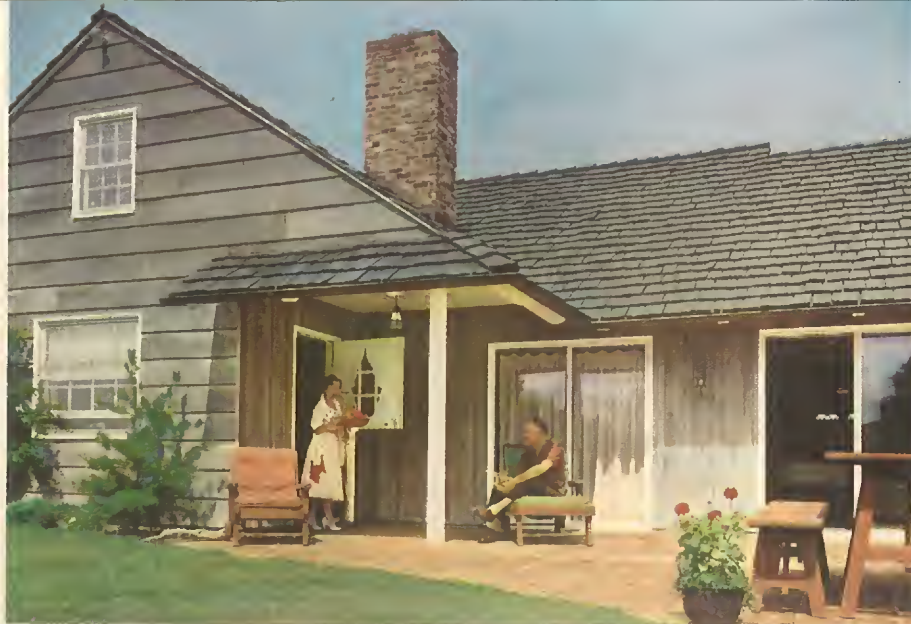

✱ The mellowness of wood lets you relax without a discordant note to mar the peaceful ease of a quiet evening at home.

✱ Yesteryear's fence and a house as modern as tomorrow symbolize the calendar-defying qualities of wood. There is no other material that so gracefully copes with the passage of time.

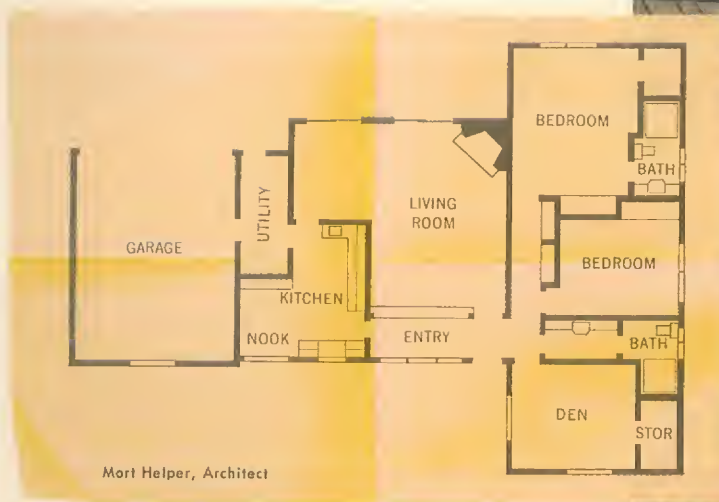

✧ If you prefer a weathered exterior rather than a painted surface, adaptable Douglas fir lets you make the decision. In this attractive patio, sparkling white trim accents the rustic effect.

There's an airy charm in the softly gleaming luster of the master bedroom with its V-joint paneling and built-in bookshelf.

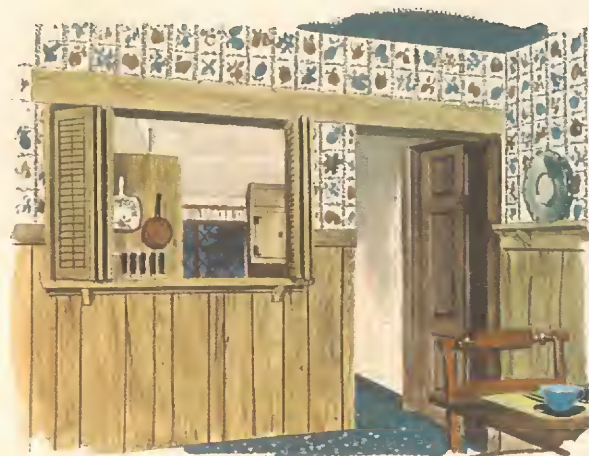

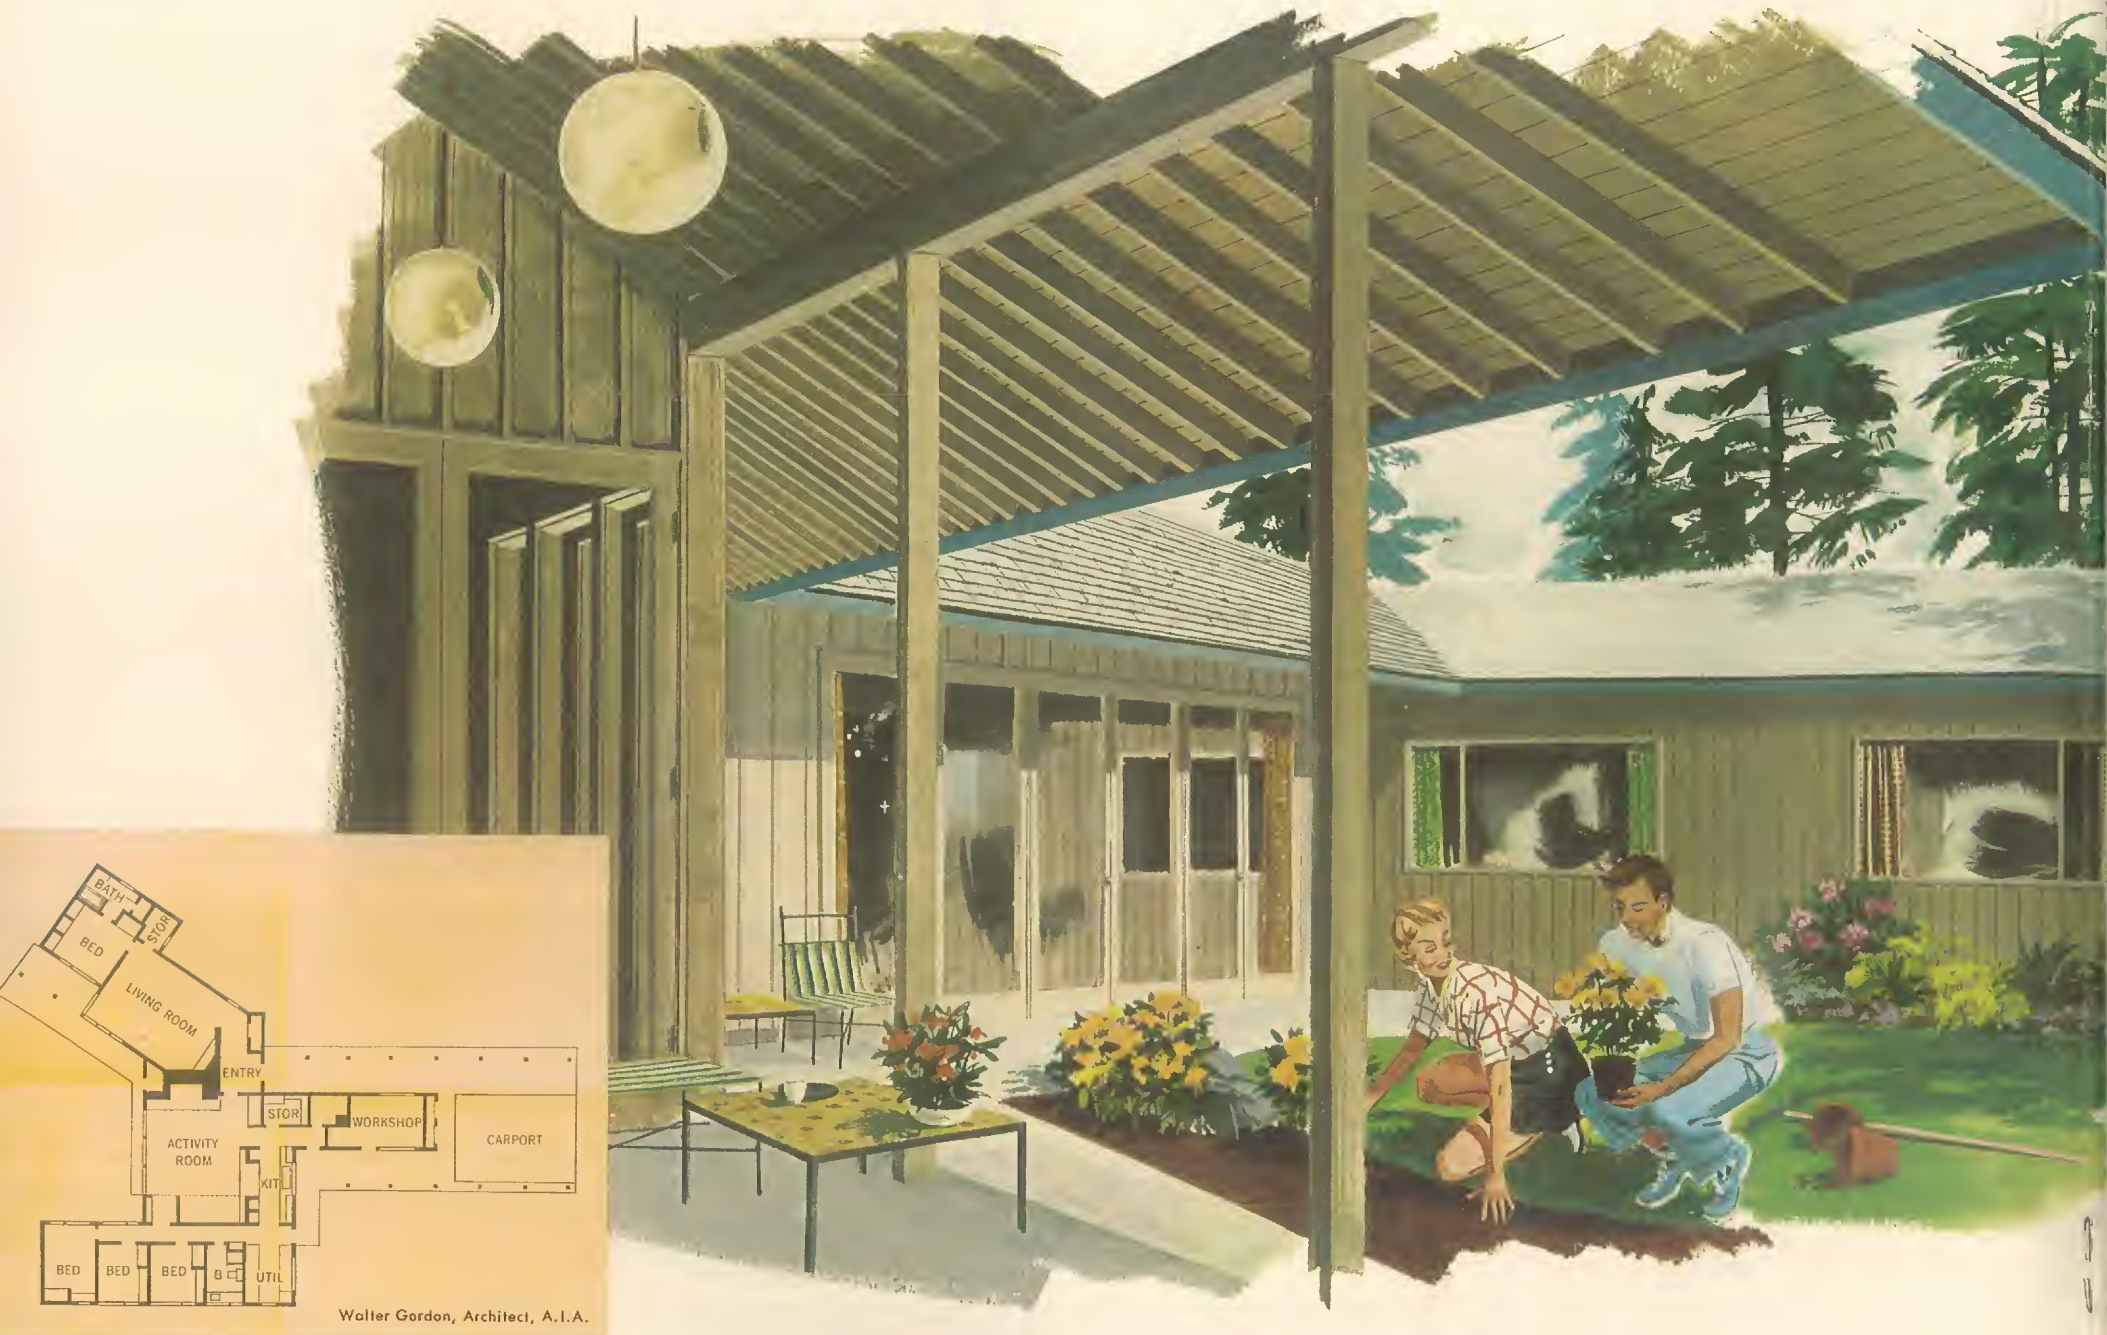

✧ Tactfully diverting kitchen-bound traffic, the open hallway keeps the living room spacious and light.

This modern counterpart of a sturdy 19th century farmhouse uses horizontal lines of bevel siding to achieve the long, low look, and board and batten to produce the harmonious verticals which so effectively separate the gabled roof lines. Inside, the modern use of color and natural wood finishes replace the clinical white of yesterday's kitchens.

Walter Gordon, Architect, A.I.A.

Children's ideas of quiet are seldom identical with the views held by their parents on the same subject. Here, the sound-deadening qualities of wood and widely separated bedroom wings permit both interpretations.

✧ A modified U-design provides restful seclusion, while neutrally stained wood siding combines agreeably with the background. Site was an important factor in the design of this house and wood helps it belong. The master bedroom has its own entry to the patio.

✧ The modern simplicity of an entire wall of West Coast hemlock furnishes an always agreeable background to accentuate the colors in the furnishings throughout the room.

✧ This storage island is the perfect answer for the man who wants enough space to keep his garden (and sport!) equipment safe but handy.

Pick your color and wood will harmonize with it. Here, the bright splash of many-hued book jackets, the vivid red of the sofa, the colors spattered liberally throughout the rug—all are blended into a distinctive unit by imaginative use of Douglas fir.

Substantial in the modern manner, this house will grow old gracefully. The heritage of the home of wood is one of friendly strength which will withstand the rigors of time and seasons.

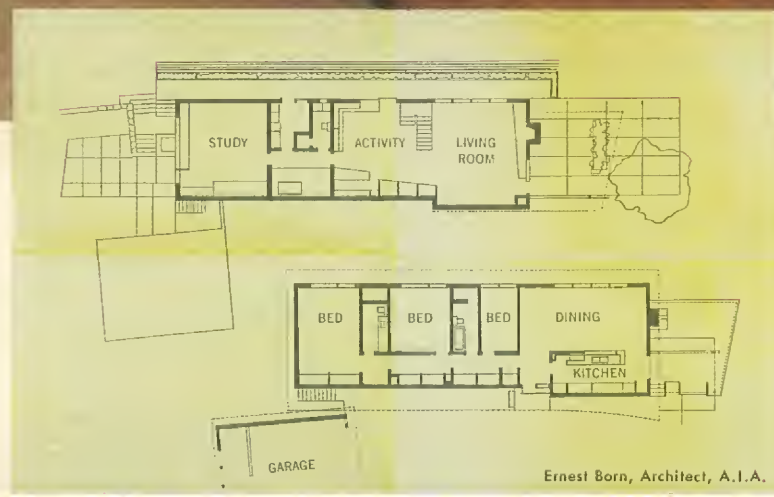

Traditional Western red cedar bevel siding and a homey bay window are given fillips of interest by crisscrossed window mullions and decorative shutters.

Built on a modified Y-type design, the house features a reversed floor plan with the kitchen overlooking the street.

With ample space provided for outdoor living on the upper deck or the lower terrace, this plan allows you to take full advantage of bright days and balmy evenings.

Ernest Born, Architect, A.I.A.

- ✧ An interesting, modern stairway leads to the upstairs bedrooms and simultaneously acts as an airy divider between living room and recreation area, both paneled with Western red cedar. The snack bar is a popular place for a quick lunch or a midnight morsel.

- ✧ Simple in design and execution, the pure lines of this fireplace wall help make your decorating job a joy. The beauty of wood in a natural finish enhances modern furnishings, without dominating the room.

- ✧ Strong vertical lines of board and batten siding create a dramatic effect in this modern home. The clever use of readily-available lumber produces a deck fencing that is both practical and handsome.

✱ This affable entry invites you to “take off your coat and stay awhile.” It’s a friendly accent that carries into the living room, paneled similarly in Western red cedar’s warm tones.

✱ There’s lots of fun helping mother in a kitchen like this—one that’s nice to look at and easy to clean up!

A suggestion of the Southwest is evident here, even to the rambling vine climbing the column. The cool, shaded look owes much of its effect to rough-textured bevel siding stained a neutral green.

✱ A passport to outdoors, this open porch lets you project yourself into green fields and white-fenced paddocks, while keeping close to the comforts of home and good food. And a sudden shower becomes just a cooling interlude to guests sheltered by hospitable West Coast woods.

✱ For the squire who likes to live in a country atmosphere and work in town, this bright counterpart of a New England farm house evokes a chore-less nostalgia. An L-shaped floor plan takes advantage of a hilly site and places the paneled study in a location insulated from the busy hum of daily activities.

✱ The pleasant warmth of West Coast hemlock in this bathroom creates islands of color highlighted by the sparkle of antique glass.

✱ Your colonial room comes to life in the polished gleam of a wooden floor. Vertical paneling and exposed beams strikingly complement the background colors.

Richard Marlett, Architect, A.I.A.

Is the home you're planning large or small?
For suburb or city? Whatever its size and location,
West Coast lumber will meet your demands in design, comfort and all-around livability.

The homes on these pages share one important factor, and that is their use of West Coast lumber: Douglas fir, West Coast hemlock, Western red cedar, and Sitka spruce. In all else — terrain, locality, design — the variation is great. Wood is the one material which is equally at home on the flat plains of Kansas, in eastern cities or western slopes.

West Coast lumber answers your varying demands for texture, finish and tone in contemporary or traditional design.

Glen Johnson, Architect

BUILD YOUR HOME OF WEST COAST LUMBER

Strength and durability, beauty and texture are intrinsic qualities in West Coast lumber. Easy to work with and available everywhere, each of the four species is distinctive in a natural finish or in the color of your choice.

For helpful ideas in your construction needs, see your retail lumber dealer. He knows the advantages of West Coast lumber and will gladly assist you, whatever your building needs and ideas.

WEST COAST LUMBER

Douglas Fir • West Coast Hemlock • Western Red Cedar • Sitka Spruce

